MSI Authorization for transfers of personal data outside of the EEA

On May 2, 2013, the UK Information Commissioner's Office approved Motorola Solutions' binding corporate rules. Binding corporate rules (commonly referred to as "BCRs") are a set of binding privacy commitments formally adopted by the group members of a company-group. BCRs allow worldwide transfers of personal data within members of a company group in full compliance with European data protection laws.

The BCRs were authorized under the mutual recognition procedure with the UK Information Commissioner acting as lead regulator and the Spanish Data Protection Agency ("AEPD") and the French data protection authority ("CNIL") acting as co-lead regulators.

By adopting and seeking EU-level authorization of its BCRs, Motorola Solutions has decided to use BCRs as its preferred mechanism for achieving compliance with European rules on international transfers of personal data. Motorola Solutions also relies on alternate means for data protection compliance, including model EU clauses and adherence to the US Safe Harbor regime, particularly when carrying out transfers of personal data to entities that are not part of the Motorola Solutions group.
